The Issue:

An interactive version of these maps, which shows the latest IUR and TUR measures for each state, as well as the number of weeks of EB lost as a result of the IUR measure excluding extension claimants, is available on CPL’s website.
How to Use This Document

This appendix illustrates the key measurements which determine a state’s eligibility for Federal-State Extended UI Benefits (EB) during the COVID-19 Recession. For workers in a state to receive EB, the state must meet either the Insured Unemployment Rate (IUR) or Total Unemployment Rate (TUR) threshold.¹

For each state, 2 figures are shown. The first figure shows the official IUR measure, which is illustrated by the blue line, and a replicated IUR that includes extension claimants (illustrated by the orange line). In general, a state will trigger on via IUR when the blue line rises above the IUR threshold, which is illustrated by the grey dashed line (5%). A vertical red line indicates the date when EB officially ended in the state, if at all. EB is usually triggered off shortly after the state falls below a trigger threshold.

The second figure shows TUR for the state. Some states do not have TUR laws in effect, meaning that even if their TUR measurement meets the threshold, it will not trigger EB on. This is indicated by hollow dots on the graph.

Finally, below each figure is a brief analysis describing EB usage in the state, as well as how the state has been affected by the IUR measurement not including extension claimants.

¹These are necessary but not sufficient conditions. A more thorough explanation of how a state can trigger on or off of EB is available in our corresponding Policy Brief.
